Mr. Fitzhugh, in addition to giving so much time to the service of his country, was an ardent devotee of the turf. In the year just preceding the Revolution, his horses Kitty Fisher, Regulus, Brilliant, Volunteer, and others, figured prominently on the tracks at Fredericksburg, Va., and Annapolis and Upper Marlborough, in Maryland; and after the war, for some years, his horses were well known on the turf. William Fitzhugh was a man of large wealth, owning among other estates, "Eagle's Nest," and "Somerset," in King George, "Chatham," in Stafford, and "Ravensworth," in Fairfax, to which he removed in the latter years of his life. There is on record in King George, a deed, dated January 27, 1800, reciting that William Fitzhugh, of Fairfax, by his will, left to his nephews William F. Grymes, Benj. Grymes and George N. Grymes, two tracts of land in King George, called Eagle's Nest and Somerset, and directed that said land should be equally divided between said nephews, which was done, each receiving 676 acres.

Portraits in oil of William Fitzhugh and his wife are preserved at "Ravensworth." That given in this issue is from a St. Memir copper-plate.
